

During the Bush Administration, FEMA was given hundreds of millions of dollars to retrofit former military bases and other existing infrastructure so they can be used as "camps."

Not camps as in summer camps. Camps as in prison camps and perhaps even concentration camps.

One of the first thing the Obama Administration did was to legitimize their existence.

These camps, which can be found in every state in the union, currently sit empty and are intended to be pressed into service in the event of an "emergency."

Funny that we've made it over 200 years without needing a national network of on-demand concentration camps.

Why do we need them now?

TVNL Comment: These "camps" were not used to house people made homeless during Hurricane Katrina. They clearly are not meant to help us...they are meant to stop us from fighting back!
