

ALASTAIR Campbell heaped -further pressure on Tony Blair by admitting he and the former Prime Minister should face prosecution for war crimes if the invasion of Iraq is found to be illegal.

In a rare slip-up, the spin doctor confessed that if it was found to be unlawful, those who took the country into war “should be punished”. He then tried to squirm out of his comments, made during a debate on BBC1’s Question Time, insisting the war in 2003 was lawful.

Mr Campbell told him: “I agree with that. If this was an unlawful war then the people who take the country into that unlawful war should be punished.”
